GOV. CUMMINS OF IOWA, LIKE

The great question in Iowa today, is who will succeed the late Senator Allison to the senate.

Republican leaders in the state are preparing for a fight for the control of the republican convention, which meets the first week in September, and at which Senator Allison's successor will be nominated. Congressman Walter I. Smith of Council Bluffs will be opposed to Governor Cummins, Senator Allison's old-time enemy, but the loss of the leader of the Allison faction is taken as a signal for Cummins' accession to the seat he has coveted.

The unanimous sentiment in Iowa today is that Gov. A. B. Cummins will succeed Allison. There would have been a disposition on the part of enemies of the governor to make a fight, but the cause was regarded generally as hopeless. On the other hand the announcement by Cummins that he is a candidate will be deemed as altogether too hurried and cold-blooded and will furnish an excuse for a fight. In that event it will be carried into the legislative districts, and political anarchy will result in Iowa. Governor Cummins could resign his office and allow Lieut. Gov. Warren G. East to appoint him to the senate, but the governor has said he will not do this. He has said in the past he would, in case of a vacancy, call a special session of the legislature. As congress convenes a month before the regular Iowa legislature meets, he will probably do this.

The old general assembly is strongly controlled by the Cummins faction, unless the stand-pat members would join with the democrats, and they would hardly dare to do that, though their enmity to Cummins is great.

Luck and "Pluck."

The twisted philosophy of "luck" is at the bottom of much of our social evil. The cure of this evil is found in pluck, a term synonymous with warm hearted, manly energy, which knows no defeat, but over battles bravely on until the combat is crowned with victory.

Man's Dull Attire.

Britishers are constantly becoming duller and more morose in the matter of their clothes. Their carelessness in this respect seems sometimes to amount to affectation.—Chambers' Journal.

Second-Hand Buttons.

What becomes of all the old buttons? Is there a market for them? There is no accounting for plus, needles or hooks and eyes; but buttons are far more expensive. I know a young matron who has more than 4,000 buttons of all sizes and styles and materials, but she will never sew one on a child's garment. "I could never think of using a second-hand button!" she says, putting her little foot down. When she wants a button she sends to the shop for a card of new ones. "Give the old ones to Johnny and let him sell them," she said to her husband; and the poor man has been trying for a month to find a purchaser for Johnny's stock.

'Village' Income from Golf.

The village of Brancaster, England, has made an arrangement with the Royal West Norfolk Golf club under which it receives four per cent. on the club's gross income, with a guarantee of not less than £50 in any year, for the use of the land which has been converted into links. Each year the money is distributed equally among householders of not less than 12 months' residence. This year's distribution has just been made, and the club paid over £43 16 shillings, an increase of £8 12 shillings up last year's contribution. The amount sufficed to give every householder in Brancaster five shillings and leave a balance in hand.

Expert Testimony.

A mountaineer intimated that he knew a great deal about a moonshiner on trial in a Kentucky court, and thereby got free transportation to Louisville to testify for the state.

"What can you tell us about this man?" asked the district attorney.

"Well," he answered, swelling with importance, "I seen this fellow riding along the road in the hot of a hot day on a pacing roan nag, and awaying of a flag and ablowing of a horn; and I ax him if that war a Blue Grass horse or a Chittling breed, and he said it war."—Harper's Weekly.

HE DIED POOR.

We want to hear less of the man who began poor and amassed wealth and more of the man who lived untaught and died poor.—A Modern Writer.

The words are fully spoken.

Therefore this brief sketch of a man who lived upright and died poor.

He was just an average man of clean life, fair abilities, industrious and honest. He worked hard, was economical and seldom complained. He did not want to get rich quick. He only asked a living, worthily earned, a roof-tree and a bit of garden, bread and butter for wife and babies, an occasional holiday and few luxuries.

This man was not close fisted. He had generous impulses. Out of his modest earnings he gave to his church and to help his fellows. He wore a smiling face. He was a good neighbor. He paid his debts. He loved his wife and children. He spent his evenings at home. He envied no man.

In all his life this man never earned more than $1,000 in a single year. But he saved enough to buy a little home. He kept his boy and girl in the high school until they were graduated. And, besides, there were a few dollars in the bank for a rainy day.

This man laughed often and loved much. His joys and sorrows were the joys and sorrows of the common lot. Men said of him, being, "He's all right." When he died they said, "He was a fine man and a good citizen."

That's all.

Excepting this: The life of this man, whose short and simple annals we have told, is a typical life. It is the life of the average good citizen.

And it is easy to see why we do not hear very much about him.

The newspapers and magazines are full of "success stories" concerning rich men because these men are the exception and not the rule. There is no story material in the career of the common man who lives a decent life and dies poor.

Nevertheless—

Such men are the salt of the earth! That kind of success which has been made by the use of ignoble means is nothing more than successful failure.

You could have no better epitaph upon your tombstone than this:

He lived an untaught life and died poor.

A REAL MOTHER.

Keep the children at home.

The way to keep them at home is to make the kind of a home they ought to have.

The writer knows one home of the right kind. You could scarcely drive the children away from that home with a club.

It is not a fine home or expensive to keep. It is just comfortable. And it is presided over by a woman of rare sense and tact. This woman cares more for her children than she does for fine clothes, or for society, or for a woman's club. She wants her children to have a good time while they may—and knows how to give it to them.

For instance:

Two boys belong to this family. What fun those young cubs have! They do not go scrambling to their chores. Mother knows how to make drudgery a rare sport. Or, if the task is hard, there is the sure reward of play at the other end. There is a big yard and garden. The boys work sometimes in the garden and erect high finks in the back yard. There is a big tree, the barn, the alley. Nasty? Of course. That develops lung cells. And they are mighty hard on clothes! But—

If you want to find the boys of the neighborhood go to that house—the infallible boy test of the sort of mother fellows have.

Down in the basement are plenty of tools and soft pine boards. And things are a bit topsy turvy down there. But you should see the "contraptions" the boys make. And if by any means they make something for "mother"—why, that is best of all.

In the yard are a swing and a hammock. To be sure, they break down occasionally when too many kids tumble in at once. But rope and hammocks do not cost much. And nobody is ever scolded.

There is also a girl in the family.

She is something of a romp. The neighbors call her a "tomboy." She is as lithe as the family cat. And there are freckles on her nose.

You might think there is great destruction of property in this home, but there is not. And, above all, in the daily vocabulary of this bright mother there is NO SUCH WORD AS "DON'T."

The recipe for keeping the children at home is a simple one:

It is—A little good sense, a few ounces of patience, a pinch of tact. Mix with REAL MOTHER LOVE.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Sheboygan, Wis., Aug. 10.—Swinging a sharp ax above his head as he dashed through the streets of Glenbeulah, a village in the western part of Sheboygan county, in an insane effort to kill his wife and babe, Stafford Barber, aged 27 years, was finally captured and is now heavily handcuffed and in chains and is believed to be violently insane.

Without any warning whatsoever, the man is said to have dashed at his wife and child with an ax. Crying for help the mother grabbed her babe of a few months and ran down the village street.

TO THE MAN WHO THINKS BEFORE HE BUYS

THE 1908 Summer is practically gone and the thinking public will begin to prepare for stern Winter. There is no use denying the fact that money is scarce and every thrifty person is looking to make HIS dollars go just as far as possible.

The question of fuel is the same big question as in years past. It has to be met with, so why not meet it resolutely and with a clear knowledge of cost and results.

Each house has burned certain kinds of fuel for years and years, possibly because they thought it the best obtainable, possibly because their mother and father use that particular kind, and possibly without any definite thought on the subject—just got into a rut.

Now times have changed, improvements have been made in every walk in life, and fuel has not been a laggard.

In the last three years we have been handling Solvay with remarkable success—success due to fundamental reasons: Solvay is the cheapest and the cleanest fuel that the market affords. It goes as far ton for ton as hard coal, and saves $2.00 or more per ton, fully 20 per cent. Compared to wood, one ton of Solvay will go as far as two cords and at one-half the cost.

You use it exactly as you do hard coal in furnace, heating stove, or cook stove.

Solvay has been tried and has stood the test of years. At first it was thought that best results were obtained by mixing it with hard coal, but those who have experimented in different ways, all come to one conclusion—use it just as you do hard coal, without mixing. We have used it in this way for one season and know that it will do exactly what we claim for it.

Solvay has no equal—but many imitators. It burns with a clean bright flame, has very little ash, great heat and can be kept over night same as hard coal.

In supplying your wants for the coming season, consider the above. It means a saving of $2.00 on every ton your furnace burns. It means a saving of half on every cord of wood your cook stove consumes.

During August Solvay will be sold at $7.00 per ton, and there will be an advance of 50c a ton September 1st, just as sure as fate.

Telephone your order today: Either phone, or address 61 South River Street, Janesville.

Many people will buy new stoves this fall. To those we say, buy a stove with a grate, for Solvay MUST have a grate

PROMINENT PEOPLE

OLDEST EX-CONGRESSMAN

Gen. Ephraim R. Eckley of Carrollton, Ohio, is the oldest living member of congress. He is now 98 and remains in vigorous health, mentally alert and interested in all that is doing in state and national politics. He never misses a local or state convention of the Republican party, and for many years has been a notable figure at national conventions either as a delegate or as a spectator.

He has lived under the administrations of every president save Washington, Adams and Jefferson. He cast his first vote when Jackson was a candidate for president and has never missed voting even at a primary contest in his home village. He remembers the report of Napoleon's downfall at Waterloo, and wondered at the time what it was all about. Later on, when Napoleon's death at St. Helena was reported, the future congressman understood.

Gen. Eckley did not seek office until 1843, when he was elected to the state senate as a whig. Six years later he was again chosen to the senate, and later to the lower branch of the legislature. Then he was on the ticket with Sam P. Vinton as a candidate for lieutenant governor but was defeated. In 1863 the whigs of Ohio picked Eckley as the candidate for United States senator, but failed of election. Upon the downfall of the old whig party he became active in the organization of the Republican party and was a delegate to the first convention at Philadelphia in 1856, when Fremont was made the nominee.

During the Lincoln campaign Gen. Eckley was very active, and when war was declared he immediately offered his services, although 50 years old. He began as lieutenant colonel and became a brigadier before the year was ended. In 1862, while he was fighting in the western part of Kentucky, he was nominated and elected to congress, but he did not resign his command until the congress was called to meet July 4, 1863. Then he stood up with Lincoln, Garfield and Allison to be sworn in. They were beginning their congressional life, and Garfield had also been elected during his service in the army. Gen. Eckley served three terms.

FIGHTS SENATOR PENROSE

William Flinn, who has entered the lists against United States Senator Roles Penrose as the Republican leader in Pennsylvania, claims to be motivated only by altruistic motives. He does not want to succeed Penrose as senator, he says, but he objects to Penrose on the ground that his leadership has served only to perpetuate the tyranny established by "Mar" Quay, and that the public interests demand a new leader.

Penrose is the son of wealthy parents, and his way in life has been made smooth for him, while Flinn is the son of poor Irish immigrants, and had to fight his own battles. He is said to be worth $15,000,000 now, but that as it may, he began life with nothing, he inherited nothing, and has never been charged with cheating anybody. The one man was sent to college and received a classical education, the other got his education in the public schools, and supplemented his slender stock of learning by his own efforts in later days.

Flinn was elected to the state legislature in 1878, serving three terms in the house and three in the senate. For 18 years he was delegate to every Republican state convention, and to five successive national Republican conventions. He was also chairman of the Republican city committee of Pittsburgh for 18 years.

It has been said of Flinn that he is an intermittent reformer, but even that is something more than is claimed for his opponent. It was Flinn who led the revolt against Quay during the session of 1899. Flinn is a man who was born to fight. He has the reputation of never saying yes when he means no.

WOULD PAY EX-PRESIDENTS

Senator James H. McCreary of Kentucky, who proposes to pay all our ex-presidents (two have only one) a salary of $10,000 a year and have them serve on all international exposition commissions, is one of the best examples of tenacity in American public life. He had been for over 30 years a leader in Democratic politics in Kentucky.

Senator McCreary is an Imperialist in a sense; he is no parochial politician with an outlook bounded by the limits of his native town. In the 12 years he sat in the lower house of congress he had more to do with international questions than probably any other man. He devised the scheme of uniting North, South and Central America with a railway; and if there is ever a road built to connect Hudson's bay with the Straits of Magellan it will be a monument to his memory. He was the author of the resolution declaring against European control of any canal in American territory connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific. He fathered the bill authorizing the president to retaliate upon foreign vessels for injuries to American fishing vessels. He was the author of two bills to settle international disagreements concerning the fur-bearing seals of the Behring sea. He was the organizer of the Pan-American medical congress, which met in Washington in 1896. He brought about the passage of some important amendments to the Geary Chinese exclusion law and some legislation concerning Hawaii. Finally he may be regarded as the father of the new navy, for it was due to a ruling of his that the construction of that navy was made possible.

Senator McCreary was born in Madison county, Ky., in 1833. When the civil war broke out he enlisted in the Kentucky cavalry as a private. He was lieutenant colonel when the end came. He participated in the welcome Kentucky gave her returning troops. His dreams of political life, which had been laid aside while the war lasted, returned to him and he proceeded to make them realities.

FAVORS NEW CANAL

Frederick C. Stevens, superintendent of public works of New York state, seems to have a mania for canal building. In his official capacity he has charge of the building of the new Erie canal, which is to cost $101,000,000; he is the financial backer of William J. Oliver, contractor for the Panama canal, and now he is urging the United States government to join with the state of New York in building a new canal from Lake Ontario to the Hudson river, to place New York city in direct communication with the great lakes, enabling that city to retain its supremacy as a shipping port, a supremacy that will be threatened by Montreal if the Canadian government's Georgian Bay-Ottawa river canal goes through. If the United States acts on his advice, it is quite likely that Mr. Stevens will have direction of the construction of the newest canal, and thus be intimately connected with three of the greatest engineering enterprises of the kind in the world.

Mr. Stevens never sought the position he holds in New York state; it was thrust upon him by Gov. Hughes. Being a multi-millionaire, he took a merely academic interest in politics, and served a few terms in the state senate. He was instrumental in getting a reduction of the price of gas for the people of New York and compelling insurance reforms, and would have compelled an investigation of state banking but for the combined influence of the money power. It was resolved that a dangerous man had to be crushed, and Congressman James W. Wadsworth, son-in-law of the late Secretary Hay and defender in court of the Chicago packers, got Mr. Stevens' district gerrymandered in such a way as to oust him. Stevens is a mild-mannered man, but when the trenchery was disclosed to him he vowed to have Wadsworth's scalp, and he got it.

PICTURE BOOK WILES

How the Catalogues Lure Buyers With Deceptive Cuts.

ARGUMENT FOR HOME TRADE

The Man Who Sends Money Away For Goods He Could Buy at Local Stores Strikes at the Very Root of His Own Prosperity—Hints to the Wise.

The head, the hoof and the hide of the mail order business is the catalogue, and the meat of the catalogue is the picture. In these voluminous books the larger catalogue houses picture everything from a hog ring to a portable sawmill. They picture things which they have and which they have not. Everything goes in this great book of books. If they have not the real thing that the picture represents, they have something "just as good and cheaper," says a writer in Maxwell's Tattleman.

They invite you to send in your money, for this is strictly a cash in advance proposition. If they have not what you order they will send you something else, but be sure to send your money in with your order. That is important. You will have no opportunity to examine the goods and compare the quality with other grades, but what of that? It is such an exciting moment when you come to open the bag and see the color of the cat.

The catalogues are sent to every family where there is a possibility of securing an order. And these picture books, supplemented by persistent advertising in the agricultural and religious journals, keep a constant stream of money flowing from the legitimate channels of trade into the coffers of these catalogue concerns.

The business policy of the old grange movement was short-sighted, and the results proved it to be impracticable. It was born of prejudice and a misconception of the organic laws of trade. The country needs the town as much as the town needs the country. And the middleman is an essential cog in the wheel of everyday trade. To cut out the retail merchant and business men generally in the country town is to destroy the small trade and social centers, the prosperity and growth of which will always determine the value of farm property in their vicinity. The farmer is to a consuming market the greater becomes the earning power of each acre and consequently the greater its value in the general market. The catalogue mail order idea if carried out to its ultimate conclusion would wipe out every village and small town and leave nothing but individual farms and a few large distributing centers, with a complete monopoly on the essential commodities. Local centers of consumption that now furnish the market for a large per cent of the farm products would disappear from the map, and the social and educational advantages afforded in a large community could be found only in a catalogue center, and there would be no need for more than one of them. The greatest trust in the world is the ideal catalogue mail order combination. It covers every possible field of trade and brooks no competition.

Civilization as we know it is based upon reciprocal obligations. In the ordinary course of trade the local merchant furnishes a market for the smaller products of the farm and also provides a reasonable assortment of goods for the use and convenience of the community. For these accommodations the community is under a reciprocal obligation to give him the preference of trade—at least to give him a fair chance to compete for that trade. This principle is recognized by the community when it demands that peddlers take out a license.

The man who sends his money away for his home town for goods that he can buy at the local store loses more than he can possibly gain. He strikes at the very root of his own prosperity. It is a penny wise and pound foolish business. Every hundred dollars sent out of the county reduces the working capital of the county just that much. A prosperous country town indicates a prosperous rural community. If your towns look needy and unkempt, if the "For Rent" signs in the store windows stare you in the face, if the merchants are discouraged, what is the effect on farm property—what does the stranger, the investor, if you please, think of the community in general? Will he invest his money in a community that is not true to itself? The thinking man knows that the price of farm real estate depends so much upon its nearness to a good live town as it does upon the producing power of the soil.

Village Improvement.
The state grange of Massachusetts, comprising over 200 individual granges with a total membership of about 3,000, has decided to make village improvement a regular part of its work in the future. The grange thus admits the value of improvement work and gives to it a broad interpretation, including among the proper fields for development the general environment, the home, the individual, the farm, the neighborhood and the town. The desire to co-operate with all other forces for the improvement of civic conditions is also expressed. "The end in view," an increase in the beauty and attractiveness of the towns of the state, is commendable, says Maxwell's Tattleman. By this alone may the town compete with the city and cease to be decadent. The grange has already done good work in this field in individual cases, and this broader movement promises much.

Special Occasions.
It is only when they are nominated for office that some men care whether anybody knows which church they attend.—Washington Post.

She is the target for many a good-natured quip pertaining to her alleged hopes and endeavors in the direction of matrimony.

Not long ago a certain society of young men which had interested itself in the campaign for higher school license sent a committee to visit the homes of the district and obtain signatures to a high-license petition. When this committee, numbering a half dozen members, ascended the steps at the B. home my friend's wife was the first to see it through the front window.

"Loose, John!" she exclaimed to her husband. "See all those young men coming to visit us!"

SCIENCE NOTES

Several anchors have been recently made at the navy yard at Charlestown, Mass., which are the largest ever made for any purpose. Four anchors are used on battleships generally, and the new anchors are being shipped in sets to the Pacific Coast. One pair of this set of four weigh 17,000 each. The largest anchors ever forged prior to these now being used weighed 16,500 pounds each and cost $2,000 each. They were also made at the Charlestown yard.

Each of the big anchors required the work of five men for a month, hammering, smelting and welding it. These mammoth anchors are so constructed as to meet the conditions of weather and sea, to hold the largest battleship afloat. The size is 13 feet long from crown to shank, and about 16 feet from one arm point to the other. The heavy crossbar is also about 15 feet long, while the pin, or shank, at each end, are about 32 inches wide.

The first of these big anchors was tried as an experiment. It was not certain that such a large anchor could be successfully forged, and the great weight, large generally been made of cast steel, and such have been used on both American and British warships. But the cast anchors were found liable to breakage, so wrought iron ones were tried a few months ago, and turned out successfully at the Charlestown plant.

An instrument to measure the hardness of metals has been recently devised, more especially designed and found very useful in the manufacture of tools like twist drills, where the hardness has to be kept between narrow limits. It consists of a glass tube, within which a steel ball of 40 grains weight, treated by a special process so as to have jewel hardness, falls freely. The height of the rebound of the ball measures the hardness of the metal it strikes. Where the area of contact between the dropped weight and the metal is large, so that an appreciable dent would be made, the rebound would be a measure of elasticity rather than hardness. The height of the rebound is measured on a scale, of which 100 is the average hardness of carbon steel, which is also found to be the safety limit for steel tools after reheating and tempering ready for use.

John J. Arnold, an electrical transportation expert, has recently devised, near New York City, with the object of suggesting means of increasing the capacity of the line with the view of adequately answering the demands made upon it. This line has been overloaded from west to east, and the management was once confronted with the problem of handling larger crowds than the line was meant to accommodate. Mr. Arnold has made his report, containing a number of suggestions which may offer a radical, but the most interesting suggestion contained in it for one to be considered in the construction of future railways, and that is for double-decked stations where one floor will be devoted to the local trains and the other to the express service, so that the trains will be run independently of each other to a very great extent, and it is stated will greatly cut down the running time of all trains. The plan offered calls for "platform platforms," one on each side of the tracks, so that passengers may enter the train from one side while others are leaving at the other side. These platforms are so arranged that they will all lead to one large platform or "transfer," where passengers may be readily transferred.

earth, and she recovers.

"Outdoor life is everything for the woman who wants to keep young."

"Her walk gives away the woman who does not want people to know how old she is. Usually she loses her elasticity. And she takes to high heels and a stilted walk. Worn conventional clothing and be elastic in your gait. In that way you will look younger."

"I advise women generally to join a dancing class. By taking the steps one can keep up one's elasticity winter and summer. I have a class of four women who come three times a week to learn the gypsy fandangoes and the Spanish dances. They find that they breathe better, feel better and are more healthy generally from this exercise."

WHAT IS MEANT

It is all well and good for the Daily News to call Cooper a Taft-Roosevelt republican, insinuating that he is not one—but that does not explain Cooper's stand on the currency measure, a distinctly Taft-Roosevelt measure, which he voted against with the democrats. It does not explain Mr. Cooper's attitude as a member of the committee on rules, at the national republican convention, when he presented a minority platform report which was voted down by an overwhelming majority. This is what is meant when the statement is made that the district has been misrepresented. The records of congress show that the member from the first Wisconsin district has voted against republican administration measures—measures which were strictly a party issue. If this is not misrepresentation, if this is Taft-Roosevelt republicanism, then the majority of the so-called republican papers of the country are wrong and the republican members of congress who voted for the measure are not republicans at all, but merely anti-Cooperites. It is a poor line of reasoning.

SENATOR STEPHENSON

Senator Stephenson makes special claim upon Rock county as a former resident of the county.

Isaac Stephenson came to Rock county in 1846 and was located on a farm some five miles south of the city of Janesville, known as the Sheldahl farm, a tract of land of some four hundred acres, located in section 28. Mr. Stephenson, as a farmer, broke one hundred and thirty acres of land and planted it for wheat, remaining in this section of the state for some time.

It was not until after his experience in this section of the state that he went north and settled in Marinette.

Senator Stephenson's campaign has been a dignified one. He has not permitted himself to be embroiled in any discussion that is not bolting the office he seeks to represent the people of Wisconsin in.

THE PRIMARY LAW

The real effect of the primary law are being felt. It is said by some that when the total figures are totaled up it will be shown that more money has been spent in the United States Senatorial fight alone than the railroads spent in their so-called manipulation of the old convention system in ten years. It is interesting to note the effect of the law upon the very men who so earnestly advocated it several years ago. It means money freely spent to finance a campaign for any office this year and money does not grow on every bush. Some men can afford to play the game of politics and some can not. It is the ones who can not who are making the greatest trouble about the system that is now in vogue and who several years ago when the law was first talked of, were the most enthusiastic for its passage.

TAFT'S POSITION

Judge Taft has kept out of all state fights thus far with characteristic diplomacy. He has been asked to aid in the West Virginia battle royal, invited to help Senator Long in Kansas, talked with relative to the Iowa situation and in other states been advised of the situations that might hurt his ticket. With rare diplomacy he has kept out of all the minor state bickering. He is the national field and he does not intend to delve into state fights just yet.

FORAKER FIGHTING

While it is said that the Taft managers of Ohio will take no part in the battle that is to be waged on Senator Foraker this fall when the legislature is chosen, still it is safe to say that some of the minor Republicans will not forget the fight Foraker made on Taft last spring when the state delegation was wanted for Ohio's favorite son.

POLITICS ARE "HET UP"

This fight for the Lt.-Governorship has opened up all the old sores on the poor old political elephant and he is having a hard time once more. Strange means to stick in the fight and it promises to be a development of the old feud of two years ago when Davidson defeated Laurroot so decisively.

CONGRESSIONAL BATTLES

The first congressional district at present is not the only scene of political warfare. While Nolan and Cooper are wrestling it out here the other sections of the state are having some interesting contests.

STILL WAITING

From all accounts the Bryan financial committee is still waiting for those contributions to come pouring in to aid the great reformer.

The Independence Party is still ready to do business and with this offshoot of democracy with Watson heading what is left of the populists Bryan's original party is sadly depleted.

There is a professor at Chicago University who says the American people are losing control of the United States because they will not raise large families as did their ancestors.

It will be an awful shock to Bryan to learn that the democrats at Denver nominated him as their presidential candidate. However, the truth will be told him in a few days.

Princess Alice will soon give way to some other daughter of the President, be it Miss Taft or Princess Ruth Bryan Leavitt.

Roosevelt at Oyster Bay this summer is not attracting half the attention that either Taft or Bryan are. Perhaps he is glad of it.

Pittsburg comes to the front again, when Harry Thaw tries to secure immunity from his debts by legal proceedings.

Thus far the only sea serpent that has appeared at the summer resorts worthy of notice has been the hotel-keeper's bill.

The republicans still talk of breaking into the solid south and taking one or two states from the column of democracy this fall.

Unless rain comes shortly the magnificent prospects for banner crops in Rock county are going to be disappointing.

A Minnesota man has sent Bryan a trained mole that is warranted to kick the stuffing out of the republican elephant.

Illinois does not appreciate the primary law half as much as it did before it tried it.

So Deussen appears to have defeated his old-time opponent, Yates, by a neat majority.

Princesses are not as popular in Illinois as they were before they were tried.

There is complaint of lack of interest in local politics this year.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

Copyright, 1908, by Edwin A. Nye.

DID HE LOVE HIS MOTHER?

To the best mother a boy ever had. These are the last words you will hear from me, Lovelady, CHARLIE.

Having written the above, Charles Jacobs of New York city, a young man of nineteen, put a bullet into his brain.

There was no good reason why he should have done so. No motive is assigned for the act. When his mother heard the pistol shot she hastened to his room and was crazed by the shock.

Would a boy who really loves his mother kill himself and break his mother's heart?

Certainly not, if he was sane. The incident and the note serve to remind us that there are altogether too many young men like Charles.

Perforce expressions of love for mother like the above are mere coverings of sentimentality. The expression is cruelly belied by the action.

It is easy to compliment one's mother, quite another to repay the mother or love by a course of conduct that will make her happy.

It is easy to sing the refrain, "If you love your mother, meet her in the sky." The sacred theme lends itself to the haunting notes of the tune. But it is an entirely different proposition to make mother's last days her sweetest.

The grisly hum who infects the police courts only prefaces his manful plan for clemency by the snide, "I had one of the best mothers a boy ever had."

The declaration is an indictment which leaves no room for special pity and more is to be expected of him who had a good mother. And if the son goes down despite the mother's goodness the more delinquent his conduct appears.

"The best mother a boy ever had." If only the Charles Jacobs could see the full significance of the word! The pity of it is that he cannot understand that such a mother calls for THE BEST BOY A MOTHER EVER HAD!

The mother of Charles Jacobs will find in her heart a great pity and a great love for her boy. Mothers are made that way, but—

If Charles Jacobs had been consistent he would have written these words in farewell to his mother:

To the best mother a boy ever had, I go contrary to every instinct you have given me, I choose to plunge a dagger in your heart. CHARLIE.

LET ALL PULL TOGETHER.

Then Maybe That Prospective Factory Will Come to the Town.

Nothing helps more to build up a town commercially than the locating of a reputable, up to date manufacturing concern "in our midst." This sort of establishment also helps to build up a town socially, for it supplies employment and wages to young people who otherwise might not earn money enough to take a part in local social affairs. Every factory, large or small, that any town can get adds to the vitality of the town and community. In commenting on a proposition recently received from a firm that wants a two-acre factory site in Cold Spring, N. Y., with a guarantee of steady employment for fifty men, the editor of the Sentinel in that town makes some remarks which are applicable to any other town in the United States.

"There are only two things needed—unity on the part of the citizens of Cold Spring and a cordial welcome to the new industry."

"So long as the citizens of Peekskill were divided the village made no progress. When these divisions ended and a spirit of enterprise, construction and progress was shown the recent marked progress of Peekskill started."

"Every city in the country has a similar history. Industries do not come unless they are solicited or at least made welcome."

"Cold Spring has missed getting two or three factories through lack of a united spirit on the part of her citizens. Why not get over all these petty jealousies and unite to help each other and to uphold the community?"

Do not forget the dance Wednesday, Aug. 19th, at M. W. of A. hall; music by Leaver's orchestra of four pieces.

ALLOWS VOTARIES NO PEACE.

Unfortunate Indeed Are Those Unduly Superstitious.

The superstitious woman started to go down town, but found that she had forgotten something. It was hard work to get her to go back for it, but when she did she sat down for a few minutes to "take the curse off" before going out again. On the sidewalk she passed a cross-eyed man, and had hard work to keep from spitting three times over her left shoulder. The first car that came along was No. 13. She let it go by, and waited eight minutes for another. On the way down town she remarked to a friend that she "had been in excellent health this summer."

Instantly she was obliged to loosen her glove and rub her bare palm on the wood of the bench before her. As she and her friend were walking on Twenty-third street some thoughtless person darted between them. The superstitious woman was much disturbed and worried over the thought of a coming separation.

That night her husband upset the salt-cellar. She insisted on his taking a pinch of the salt and throwing it over his shoulder. When she discovered for the night she discovered that she had been wearing one stocking wrong side out all day. It was a sign of good luck, and it allowed her to go to bed happy. But some time in the night a dog howled dimly under her window. From that moment she has been looking for a calamity. Nothing will make her believe that there will not be a death in her immediate family.—New York Times.

TATTOOERS DRINK THE BLOOD.

Part of the Operation as Conducted by Expert Japanese.

Young Liang, Marlinson's revealed on his right arm an Uncle Sam, and on his left a peacock, while round his neck a gleaming serpent was coiled, its mouth holding its tail.

"This is Japanese tattooing," the lieutenant said, proudly. "Nagasaki work. I was under the needle 12 hours in all. My two tattooers drank quite a pint of my blood."

"Jap tattooers are all blood drinkers. They like it. They get to like it in the end as you or I like tobacco."

"You see, as they work, the blood wells forth; it flows over the design, and then, very carefully, without smearing the wet ink, they lick the blood up delicately with the tongue."

Every Jap tattooer, as he picks and picks away at you, bends down every few minutes and licks the little rising tide of blood away.

"If he is a seasoned tattooer he swallows the blood. He likes it, he says."

What Killed the Adjutant.

A good story from the regimental Journal of the "Fighting Fifth" concerns Col. then Capt. Fitzroy, who dated back to 1860. Fitzroy was possessed of an airgun, and one afternoon he took a shot at an adjutant, a bird which, being an excellent scavenger, is protected from injury by a fine of 100 rupees. Several people saw the bird fall, but heard no report. There was, of course, a hubbub and a court of inquiry was ordered to investigate the bird's death.

As luck would have it, Fitzroy was appointed president of the court, the finding of which was duly recorded as follows: "The court, having carefully investigated all the evidence brought before it, have come to the conclusion that the bird died of sunstroke."

(Signed) Phil Fitzroy, Captain and President.—Allahabad Pioneer.

Words Failed Him.

He was a cowboy, and some comparative strangers had stolen his horse. His friends rallied round him, and, anxious to give him every chance, trundled up a barrel for him to stand on while he gave out his views on the matter. He was known as a gifted swearer, and a large audience had assembled in the hope of hearing something special. He got up on the barrel and looked round him. Then he drew a deep breath, and with a sigh, climbed down again. "Boys," he said, sadly, "it's no use. I can't do justice to it."

Straight from the Shoulder.

"Oppression, gentlemen," shouted the orator, "like a box constrictor or anaconda of gigantic size and immense proportions, wraps the foul coil of its unwieldy body round the unfortunate patriot's soul—loud and reverberating as the nocturnal thunder rolling in the midnight empyrean—finally to break its tyrant neck upon the iron wheel of independence, or, on the other hand, forcing him first to desperation, then to madness, in the end to crush him in the hideous jaws of mortal death."

Origin of the Bolster.

The Crusaders are said to have brought home with them the bolster, and, according to Dr. Cantillo, their wives, in ignorance of the only rational way of using the article (i. e., placed lengthwise as a support for the back of a person when lying on his side), and not knowing what else to do with it, put the bolster where it is still found on the beds of those who have not learned the wisdom of discarding it altogether—under the pillow!

What He Needed.

"My eyes bother me a good deal, doctor. Do you think I need stronger glasses?"

"No. I think you need weaker glasses—and fewer," was the blunt answer.

Few Free from Conceit.

Conceit is just as natural a thing to human minds as a center to a circle.

—Holmes.

MUNICIPAL CLEANING.

Excellent Practice That Should Be Made Permanent Custom.

It has become quite a fad in southern California to proclaim and observe certain days as cleanup days, especially in our smaller cities, our towns and villages. On these days the mayor, council, trustees, board of health or some constituted power or authority has asked the residents to clean up their yards and the streets and alleys abutting, to beautify their premises, plant and care for street trees and strive in every way to make their community more attractive and beautiful and therefore more valuable from a realty point of view.

The idea is a most excellent one and should be encouraged in every way. These public workdays should be observed in every community in our land and should be made permanent, setting aside one day each month or one day each quarter in which all should aim to make the place more livable. Municipal health and beauty mean wealth both collectively and individually. Home seekers are not attracted by dirty and slovenly municipal housekeeping. Cleanliness means or is capital, and it has been observed that the greatest growth of population has been in those centers made the most beautiful and attractive, and this through zealous, well directed co-operation.

TOWN MADE BY GOOD ROADS.

A Vilets (Mo.) Banker Says His Village Is a Success Too.

Good roads are so important a thing to farmers that in one town in Missouri the farmers made a town to order at the place where the roads appeared to be best. Railroad officials said there was no room for another town between such good places as Vermillion and Frankfort, only ten miles apart, but the farmers insisted. So Vilets was established, town "171n," on the road to Kansas City, because it was between 171 and 172.

W. T. Ducks, banker and grain man of Vilets, was in Kansas City the other morning and says that every one agrees the town is a success.

"Although our population is only 100," he said, "we handle from 200,000 to 400,000 bushels of grain every year in two elevators, one with a capacity of 12,000 bushels and another of 10,000."

Hospitals For Trees.

"The trees of Paris will delight you," said the traveled man who was seeing off his friend. "Every boulevard and avenue has its two lines of trees. Sheltered from the hot sun, you walk under them in a cool green dusk. That hot and dusty city doesn't easily keep its trees vigorous and fresh. It must have tree hospitals—great nurseries where, with all sorts of liquid parasite killers and all sorts of stimulating fertilizers, the run down urban trees are built up again. Continually in Paris you see faded trees being taken up and fresh trees being put down and fresh faded trees alike in those ambulances which we call transplanters drive continually up and down the sunny streets."

The Fight For Niagara Falls.

The American Civic association is still fighting for the preservation of Niagara falls and the natural surroundings, for the abolition of the giant billboards that desecrate the land immediately contiguous and to prevent signs being painted upon or fastened to rocks, trees, etc., on every hand. In this noble work they should have the moral and financial support of every person who believes in the preservation of natural beauty.

Undoubtedly.

That John Calvin played bowls on Sunday was cited in a Brooklyn court in defense of moving picture shows remaining open on that day. Still, there was nothing to show that today John Calvin wouldn't pass up both bowls and the moving picture shows to witness a corking good game of baseball.

Dangers of Sentiment.

It is useless trying to explain on sociological, psychological or other mysterious grounds the extraordinary number of crimes committed recently in this country. The cause of the crime wave is simply the suppression of capital punishment. Only fear of the gallows will stay the arm of the criminal.—Pitt Journal, Paris.

MUST ATTEMPT TO FIND OWNER.

Only Thing to Do When One Picks Up 'Lost Property.'

When one is on the public thoroughfare or in the street car or train or boat and picks up an object that is valuable, is it his?

"True, he may find something which is too small and trifling to warrant searching to find the owner, such as a handkerchief, a pair of gloves, etc., but when he finds something of value, it is not his until he has done everything in his power to find the owner."

The street railways and trains are so systematized to-day that if, when one finds an object of value, he returns it to the company's representative, it is almost sure to catch up with its owner. Every person of intelligence knows that the Soldiers Make Good Servants. They have in England a society for "the employment of reserve soldiers," and some ladies connected with it have taken the trouble to train the ex-soldiers for servants, and it is said, with remarkable success. The men who have been the officers' servants are most sought for this purpose, and they are said to like the work in the house, and although old, many of them are quite strong.

BUSY MORNING AT CITY HALL

JAMES BOLAN, GUILTY OF THEFT, ESCAPED PRISON SENTENCE.

ROCKFORD YOUTH PAID FINE

For Carrying Concealed Weapon—Marcel Huggitt, 14 Years Old and Homeless Sent to County House.

James Bolan who paid a heavy fine on July 18 for the theft of a baby of a blind woman from the Leonard-Thurston store, was arrested again by Chief Appleby late Saturday afternoon on the charge of stealing a pair of trousers worth $2 from the same establishment. The garment was too small for Bolan and he sold it for 25 cents at a second-hand store, investing the proceeds at a neighboring saloon. In municipal court this morning he pleaded guilty to petty larceny, second offense, and after reiterating his former statement that strong drink was wholly responsible for his undoing, threw himself on the mercy of the court. He had been unable to send him to the penitentiary for six months. Judge Elford would probably have imposed such a sentence, but the minimum is a year and the court after considerable deliberation, decided to give the man one more chance. In explanation of his offense, Bolan will spend 30 days in the county jail and pay a fine and cost amounting to $13 with the alternative of 30 days more. The prisoner came here three years ago from East St. Louis and was employed for a time at the Spalding farm. Only recently, so it appears, has he developed criminal tendencies. In answer to questions Bolan said that he was 32 years old and unmarried.

Concealed Weapon Costly.

Leon Stentman who operates an ice cream cone wagon in Rockford took a day off in Janesville, and the experience proved a costly one. At the Silver Moon on North Main street, Saturday evening, he appears to have gotten into an altercation with some of the other thirsty patrons of the place and to have decided to uphold his end of the argument by force of arms. At any rate he absented himself from the company long enough to purchase a .32 caliber revolver and cartridges at a hardware store in that vicinity and upon his return allowed parties who differed with him to learn that he carried a loaded gun and might henceforth be considered a dangerous man to trifle with. Officer Dorn was promptly notified and conducted the twenty-three year old to the lock-up without delay. Informer Judge Elford this morning Stentman pleaded guilty to the charge of carrying concealed weapons and acknowledged the force of the court's suggestion that a loaded revolver and a gun constituted an extremely dangerous combination. He paid a fine and costs amounting to $8 and the next morning he was out for the Forest City, vowing that this inhospitable city should never see him more.

Homeless Girl in Court.

Maribel Huggitt, aged fourteen, an extremely pretty and bright little girl who has been searching for employment and spending the nights, sometimes, wherever she could find shelter, was picked up by the police yesterday afternoon at the Walkley clinic on North River street, and taken to the city hall. She is only one of a group of young girls of tender age who are running wild in the city and Chief Appleby has determined to get them away from evil company and the downward path that leads inevitably to a life of shame, if possible. In this instance the girl's father, Thomas Huggitt, who lives near Indian Park, has recently remarried and he and his wife are boarding and apparently unable to provide for the child. The other four children have been placed with relatives but, being the eldest, this one is expected to shift for herself. Against the idea of going to the Girls' Industrial school in Milwaukee the young woman protested with tears and pleaded for a chance to continue her search for work. Arrangements were finally made to have Supt. Kilham take care of her for a few days at the county home and in the meantime an effort will be made to find employment for her with some respectable and responsible family. She is intelligent, rather mature for her age, and apparently sincere in her desire to earn an honest living.

Punished for Drunkenness.

James Hickey of Marengo, Ill., and Louis "Huddy" O'Rourke, pleaded guilty to charges of drunkenness and each was assessed a fine and costs amounting to $10, with the alternative of five days in jail. Neither was able to produce the necessary cash, for the time being, at least.

EDITH BABBITT WAS LOCATED LAST NIGHT

Friends in Beloit Learn She Is at the Home of Reverend James Whitelaw.

Mystery which has surrounded the disappearance of Edith Babbitt, the daughter of the late Clinton Babbitt of Beloit, has become more intense, although word has been received that she is at the home of Reverend J. Whitelaw in Sparta. Reverend Whitelaw's first wife was Miss Babbitt's sister and her appearance in his home and the announcement he sent to friends of the Babbitt family that he desired a conference with them has deepened the mystery considerably. It is probable that a conference will be held tonight or tomorrow. Prof. E. G. Smith and Professor Burr are two of the most prominent searchers in the party.

AGED PATIENT AT COUNTY FARM SUES

Mrs. Ellen Quinlin Sues to Recover on $200 Note Signed by Mrs. Mary Farrell of This City.

Having apparently come to the end of her slender resources, Mrs. Ellen Quinlin, an eighty-year-old patient at the county home for over four years past, instructed the authorities to make a search of her personal effects to see if there was not something still remaining to her in the shape of worldly wealth. They did so and discovered among her papers what purported to be a note for $200 signed by a Mrs. Mary Farrell, supposedly the woman who conducts a boardinghouse on South Academy street. The latter claims that she does not owe Mrs. Quinlin anything, but acting on the supposition that the aged patient may have at some time or other loaned the money and taken the note as security for payment, Supt. Elham and Konyon brought the matter to the attention of District Attorney J. J. Fisher and the latter generally offered to carry the case into the courts for Mrs. Quinlin without any cost to her, no matter what the issue. The offer was gladly accepted. Summons was served on Mrs. Farrell today and the case is returnable in municipal court on August 17.

DRY HOT WEATHER AFFECTS THE MILK

Green County Dairymen Notice Falling Off in Amount of Milk Lately.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Monroe, Wis., Aug. 10.—Green county dairymen have noticed a heavy falling off in the flow of milk as a result of the continued hot dry weather. Pastures are not only dry and burned but the trees are so numerous and so close that the cows are kept busy fighting flies during the daytime instead of feeding.

James Lewis died at his home in Jordan township, where he resided since coming to the county from Philadelphia in 1853. He was born August 18, 1831, in Ireland. He was married in Philadelphia in 1853 to Ann Hood, whose death occurred in 1887. Six children survive him, among them Andrew Lewis of this city, former clerk of the circuit court, and John Lewis of Jordan, former register of deeds. The funeral will be held Sunday.

The directors of the Green county fair may have a balloon race for one of the amusement features during the fair. Miss Dorothy De Vonda, a balloonist already engaged, is willing to race with the Belmont sisters, with whom she raced at the state fair three years ago and at the northern Wisconsin state fair two years ago. The terms will be the purse of $300 to go to the winner, best two out of three.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Janesville Daily Gazette, Aug. 10, 1868.—Attempted Highway Robbery.—On Saturday night at Mr. P. H. Grant was on his way home from his store, he was stopped near the corner of Bluff and North Second streets by two men, strangers to him, who blocked up the sidewalk as if to prevent him passing. One of them spoke to him calling him by name and said they were short of money and wanted to borrow some. He asked why if they knew him they did not come to the store. They replied that they thought it would do as well to get it there. In the meantime advancing toward Mr. G.

He told them to stand aside and let him pass, but instead of complying they still advanced, he backing off. He again asked to be allowed to pass and said he would hurt them unless they did so, but as they still assumed a threatening attitude Mr. Grant drew a revolver from his pocket and made such demonstrations that the men started on a run and disappeared. An effort is to be made to arrest them, but meantime Mr. G. proposes to stay upon the defensive himself. It was evidently a deliberate attempt by some one unknown by Mr. G. to commit a highway robbery.

Sunday Items—A good many men were seen reeling about the streets yesterday to their disgrace and to the injury of the good name of the city. Quite a disturbance was created at Rockinger's, where a few Germans were quietly drinking their beer. Several rowdies came in and when ordered to go drew their revolvers and refused. The city marshal was sent for but they withdrew before his appearance.

Put Griffin rushed into a saloon on East Milwaukee street in the afternoon and demanded a drink. On being refused by the woman who tends the bar he struck her and felled her to the floor. Another woman who interfered was served in the same way, when a couple of colored men stepped in and pulled the fellow off. One of the women had struck Pat over the head with a bottle and knocked him down. He was soon after arrested and locked up by the city marshal.

The rear doors of several saloons were kept open all day and the fact being well known to the authorities a lively time may be expected in the police court this week. The owners of these places seem to have taken the liberty to "run riot" with a high hand during the absence of Mayor Jackson. If on his return they do not feel the force of the law, we very much mistake his character.

Wrong End-Up.
In Bavaria a few weeks ago a boy 13 years old, living in a village, was standing on his head on the sidewalk when the mayor came along. Being wrong-end-up the lad could not pull off his cap and salute, and he was therefore sent to jail for a week to get his heels down in their proper place.

Count Zeppelin lost the record he was striving for in his 24-hour airship test, but in the eyes of the world he has accomplished the greatest feat of the age, and has demonstrated the feasibility of one phase of aerial navigation. The count was attempting a 24-hour continuous cruise in his airship as a final test of its practicability. Had it been successful it would have been purchased by the German government as part of the military equipment. The count is sanguine as soon as he is able to again undertake the trip. He was unfortunate in a slight mishap to his propeller and was forced to alight for repairs early in the voyage.

Again, the airship broke a day from its moorings at Stuttgart and took fire, destroying it completely. But compared with the phenomenal success of its demonstration (see our only incidents which show the imperfection of a great inventor, Count Zeppelin has made the balloon type of airship a life study. He is now well along in years and may never live to see the fruits of his own invention perfected, but it is doubtful if any one has done more in the development of this phase of air navigation than the count. His type is similar to that used by Santos Dumont and others, but he has gone at it on an enlarged scale. His airship is able to carry between five and ten passengers, and so easily maintains its equilibrium that they can walk around on its decks as on a steamer.

This phase of airship differs radically from the heavier than air type, which depends for its support upon the air. While the others are much less perfected and in fact scarcely demonstrated as yet to be successful, it is thought they will eventually be the mode of flying, for they are less subject to winds than the bulky balloons. So far only a few hundred yards have been attained by any heavier than air flying machine, and the frequency of mishaps and accidents has shown their infelicity.

It is not generally known that Count Zeppelin is a veteran of the Grand Army of the Republic. He served through the civil war as a cavalry officer in the army of the Mississippi in the brigade commanded by Gen. Carl Schurz.

At the battle of Fredericksburg the young German cavalryman owes his escape from capture to a brilliant feat of horsemanship, which carried him through the line of bayonets with which he had been encircled. It is said that it was in the Indian service that the count made his first balloon ascension, which created his interest in aeronautics. It was in a captive balloon sent up to observe the Confederate lines.

The count was successful and became enthusiastic over the possibilities of balloons for military service. Count Zeppelin has demonstrated regardless of his unfortunate mishaps, the practicability of the balloon type for war purposes, if not for passenger use, and it is a foregone conclusion that in the next war airships will play a considerable part.

Jane Cable

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON,

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

CHAPTER XX.

RAYDON sat with his chin in his hands, dull, stricken, crushed. He had heard the story of his father's business from Frances Cable, and he had been told the true story of Jane, from which he learned of the transactions in which his father had dealt. At first he could scarcely believe his own ears, but in the end he saw that but half the truth could be told.

It was past midnight when he left David Cable's not to go to his own home, but to that of Elias Droom. He knew now that the newspaper would devote columns to the "sensational high life," he knew that Jane would suffer agonies untold, but he would not blame his father for that; he knew that arrest and disgrace hung over the tall gray man who had shown his true and amazing side at last; he knew that shame and humiliation were to be his own share in the division. Down somewhere in his aching heart he nourished the hope that Elias Droom could ease the pain of these wretched disclosures.

As he traversed the dark streets across town he was vaguely wondering whether Jane's eyes would ever lose the pained, hopeless expression he had last seen in them. He wondered whether she would retract her avowal that she could not be his wife with the shame upon her; he rejoiced in her tearless, lifeless promise to hold him in no fault for what had happened.

Distressed and miserable, he spent the remainder of the night in Elias Droom's quiet room, sitting before the little stove which his host replenished from time to time during the weary hours.

Droom answered his questions with a direct tenderness that surprised even himself. He kept much to himself, however, and advised the young man to reserve judgment until after he had heard his father's side of the story.

"I've been loyal to James Bannemer, Graydon, and I'll still be loyal to him. He's not done right by other people, but he has tried to do right by you."

"If he wanted to do right by me, why did he not tell me of Jane's misfortune?" exclaimed the young man bitterly.

"Because he really wanted you to marry her. Anybody can see she is without a flaw. That's the truth, Graydon. Your father was wrong in his desire to make capital of it in connection with Mrs. Cable. I told him so. I don't believe he knew just what he was doing; he was so used to success, you see. Can't you go to sleep, boy? You need to."

"God, no!"

"I'll advise you to go home and talk it over with your father."

"Tomorrow will be time enough—after the newspapers are out. I can't bear to think of the disgrace. Harbert has been interviewed, they say. He's told everything."

"Talk to your father tonight, my boy. There may be—may be—warned tomorrow."

The young man dropped his head on his arm and burst into tears. Old Droom puffed vigorously at his pipe, his eyes lifting and uncomfortable. Twice he attempted to speak and could not. In both instances he arose and poked the fire. At last the young man's choking sobs grew less violent. Droom cleared his throat with cautious emphasis, took his snaky gaze from a print on the wall representing "Dawn" and spoke:

"You wouldn't think it to look at me now, or any other time for that matter, but I loved a woman once—a long time ago. She never knew it. I didn't expect her to love me. How could I?"

"If you ever want to come back to us, Graydon, we will welcome you with open arms. It isn't as bad as you think."

"You don't understand, Mr. Clegg, was all that Graydon could say."

Then he hurried off to face his father.

James Bannemer, haggard from loss of sleep and from fury over the alienation of his son, together with the fear of what the day might bring, was pacing the floor of his private office. Droom had eased his mind but little in regard to his son. When he heard Graydon's voice in the outer room his face brightened, and he took several quick steps toward the door. He checked himself suddenly with the remembrance that his son had turned against him the night before, and his face hardened.

Graydon found him standing stern and unfriendly before the steam radiator in the darkest corner of the room, his hands behind his back. The young man plumped down heavily in his father's desk chair.

"Why didn't you come home last night?" demanded the other.

"I hated the thought of it," he answered dejectedly.

"You've listened to their side of the story. You're a splendid son, you are!" sneered the father.

"There is nothing base and unprincipled in their side of the story. They have tried to shield her. They have never harmed her. But you! Why, father, you've blighted her life forever. They were going to tell her in a day or so, and they could have made it easy for her. Not like this! Why, in heaven's name, did you strike her like that? She's—the talk of the town. She's ostracized, that's what she is, and she's the best girl that ever lived!"

"Oh, you think they would have told her, eh? Not they would have let her marry!"

"Well, and what was your position? Why were you so considerate up to last night? If you knew, why did you let me go on so blindly? The truth is, father, if you must have it, you have acted like a scoundrel."

James Bannemer glared at his son, with murder in his eyes.

"I wouldn't have believed the other things they say of you if I hadn't this to break down my faith. I heard this with my own ears. It was too contemptible to forget in a lifetime. I did not come here to discuss it with you. The thing is done. I came here to tell you that I am going to leave Chicago. You won't go, so I will." Bannemer still glared at him, but there was amazement mingling with rage in his eyes. "I can't look a soul in the face, I am ashamed to meet the Cables, Good Lord, I'm afraid even to think of Jane."

"I suppose you would marry her, like a fool, even now," muttered the father.

"Marry her? Of course I would. I love her more than ever. I'd give my life for her; I'd give my soul to ease the pain you have thrust upon her. But it's over between us. Don't let our affairs worry you. She has ended it. I don't blame her. How could she marry your son? I have hoped that I might not be your son, after all."

Bannemer leaped heavily against the radiator, gasping for breath. Then he staggered to the couch and dropped upon it, moaning.

"Graydon, Graydon! Don't say that! Don't! I'll make everything right. I'll try to undo it all! My boy, you are the only thing on earth I love. I've been heartless to all the rest of the world, but I love you. Don't turn against me."

The son stood looking at him in dull wonder. His heart was touched. He had not thought that this stern man could weep; he began to see the misery that was breaking him.

"Dad, don't do that," he said, starting toward him. "I'm sorry. I'm sorry for you."

Bannemer leaped to his feet, his mood changing like a flash.

"I don't want your pity. I want your love and loyalty. I didn't mean to be weak. Will you leave Chicago with me? I must go. We'll go at once—anywhere, only together. We can escape if we start now. Come!"

"I won't go that way!" exclaimed Graydon. "Not like a criminal!"

"No? You won't? There was no answer. 'Then there's nothing more to say. Go! Leave me alone. I had prayed that you might not have been like this. God! I have important business to attend to at once.' He cast his gaze toward the drawer in which the pistol lay. 'I don't expect to see you again. Take this message to the Cables. Say that I am the only living soul who knows the names of that girl's father and mother. God alone can drag them from me.'"

Graydon was silent, stunned, bewildered. His father was trembling before him, and he opened his lips to utter the question that meant so much if the answer came.

"Don't ask me," cried Bannemer. "You would be the last I'd tell."

"I don't believe you know!" cried Graydon.

"Ah, you think I'll tell you?" triumphantly.

"I don't want to know." He sat down, his moody gaze upon his father. Neither spoke for many minutes. Neither had the courage, James Bannemer finally started up with a quick look at the door. Droom was speaking to some one in the outer office.

"Go now," he said harshly. "I want to be alone."

"Father, are you—are you afraid of these charges?" His father laughed shortly and extended his hand to the young man.

"Don't worry about me. They can't do anything to me. You may leave Chicago, I'll stay! Goodbye, Graydon!"

"Goodbye, dad!"

They shook hands without flinching, and the young man left the room. On the threshold the father called after him:

"Where do you expect to go?"

"I don't know."

Droom was talking to a youth who held a notebook in his hand and who appeared frightened and embarrassed. Graydon shook hands with the old man. Droom followed him into the hall.

"If you ever need a friend, Graydon," he said in a low voice, "call on me. If I'm not in jail, I'll help you."

Half an hour later Graydon rang the Cables' doorbell.

"Miss Jane is not seeing any one today, sir," said the servant.

"Say that I must see her," protested the young man. "I'm going away tonight."

"So is she, sir."

"Where?"

"I don't know, sir. California, more than likely. Mrs. Cable and she will be gone for some time."

"Did she tell you not to admit me?" he asked, white faced and calm.

"Yes, sir. Nobody, sir."

He turned down the steps and walked away.

That afternoon he enlisted and the following morning was going westward with a party of recruits, bound eventually for service with the regulars in the Philippines.

"Why didn't you come home last night?" demanded the other.

"I hated the thought of it," he answered dejectedly.

"You've listened to their side of the story. You're a splendid son, you are!" sneered the father.

"There is nothing base and unprincipled in their side of the story. They have tried to shield her. They have never harmed her. But you! Why, father, you've blighted her life forever. "I don't know."

Droom was talking to a youth who held a notebook in his hand and who appeared frightened and embarrassed. Graydon shook hands with the old man. Droom followed him into the hall.

"If you ever need a friend, Graydon," he said in a low voice, "call on me. If I'm not in jail, I'll help you."

Half an hour later Graydon rang the Cables' doorbell.

"Miss Jane is not seeing any one today, sir," said the servant.

"Say that I must see her," protested the young man. "I'm going away tonight."

"So is she, sir."

"Where?"

"I don't know, sir. California, more than likely. Mrs. Cable and she will be gone for some time."

"Did she tell you not to admit me?" he asked, white faced and calm.

"Yes, sir. Nobody, sir."

He turned down the steps and walked away.

That afternoon he enlisted and the following morning was going westward with a party of recruits, bound eventually for service with the regulars in the Philippines.

"Why didn't you come home last night?" demanded the other.

"I hated the thought of it," he answered dejectedly.

"You've listened to their side of the story. You're a splendid son, you are!" sneered the father.

"There is nothing base and unprincipled in their side of the story. They have tried to shield her. They have never harmed her. But you! Why, father, you've blighted her life forever. They were going to tell her in a day or so, and they could have made it easy for her. Not like this! Why, in heaven's name, did you strike her like that? She's—the talk of the town. She's ostracized, that's what she is, and she's the best girl that ever lived!"

"Oh, you think they would have told her, eh? Not they would have let her marry!"

"Well, and what was your position? Why were you so considerate up to last night? If you knew, why did you let me go on so blindly? The truth is, father, if you must have it, you have acted like a scoundrel."

James Bannemer glared at his son, with murder in his eyes.

"I wouldn't have believed the other things they say of you if I hadn't this to break down my faith. I heard this with my own ears. It was too contemptible to forget in a lifetime. I did not come here to discuss it with you. The thing is done. I came here to tell you that I am going to leave Chicago. You won't go, so I will." Bannemer still glared at him, but there was amazement mingling with rage in his eyes. "I can't look a soul in the face, I am ashamed to meet the Cables, Good Lord, I'm afraid even to think of Jane."

"I suppose you would marry her, like a fool, even now," muttered the father.

"Marry her? Of course I would. I love her more than ever. I'd give my life for her; I'd give my soul to ease the pain you have thrust upon her. But it's over between us. Don't let our affairs worry you. She has ended it. I don't blame her. How could she marry your son? I have hoped that I might not be your son, after all."

Bannemer leaped heavily against the radiator, gasping for breath. Then he staggered to the couch and dropped upon it, moaning.

"Graydon, Graydon! Don't say that! Don't! I'll make everything right. I'll try to undo it all! My boy, you are the only thing on earth I love. I've been heartless to all the rest of the world, but I love you. Don't turn against me."

The son stood looking at him in dull wonder. His heart was touched. He had not thought that this stern man could weep; he began to see the misery that was breaking him.

"Dad, don't do that," he said, starting toward him. "I'm sorry. I'm sorry for you."

Bannemer leaped to his feet, his mood changing like a flash.

"I don't want your pity. I want your love and loyalty. I didn't mean to be weak. Will you leave Chicago with me? I must go. We'll go at once—anywhere, only together. We can escape if we start now. Come!"

"I won't go that way!" exclaimed Graydon. "Not like a criminal!"

"No? You won't? There was no answer. 'Then there's nothing more to say. Go! Leave me alone. I had prayed that you might not have been like this. God! I have important business to attend to at once.' He cast his gaze toward the drawer in which the pistol lay. 'I don't expect to see you again. Take this message to the Cables. Say that I am the only living soul who knows the names of that girl's father and mother. God alone can drag them from me.'"

Graydon was silent, stunned, bewildered. His father was trembling before him, and he opened his lips to utter the question that meant so much if the answer came.

"Don't ask me," cried Bannemer. "You would be the last I'd tell."

"I don't believe you know!" cried Graydon.

"Ah, you think I'll tell you?" triumphantly.

"I don't want to know." He sat down, his moody gaze upon his father. Neither spoke for many minutes. Neither had the courage, James Bannemer finally started up with a quick look at the door. Droom was speaking to some one in the outer office.

"Go now," he said harshly. "I want to be alone."

"Father, are you—are you afraid of these charges?" His father laughed shortly and extended his hand to the young man.

"Don't worry about me. They can't do anything to me. You may leave Chicago, I'll stay! Goodbye, Graydon!"

"Goodbye, dad!"

They shook hands without flinching, and the young man left the room. On the threshold the father called after him:

"Where do you expect to go?"

"I don't know."

Droom was talking to a youth who held a notebook in his hand and who appeared frightened and embarrassed. Graydon shook hands with the old man. Droom followed him into the hall.

Dictum is an Old One.

When George Washington gave utterance to his famous dictum: "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace," he doubtless knew that every body would recognize his improvement upon the saying which appears in Horace in this form: "In peace, as a wise man, he should make suitable preparation for war;" while Publius Syrus had put it in essentially the same manner: "We should provide in peace what we need in war."

Learn to Cross the Road. No limitation of speed can prevent accidents from occurring to people who will not use their common sense, and who do not know what it is to be systematic in their actions. It only remains for the carelessly inclined to be made to realize their individual responsibilities before accidents will be as rare on the roads as on the railways.—Automobile Journal.

SIGNS

There are a good many erroneous ideas about the cost of Electric Signs, but, if you will inquire into our flat rate proposition it will puncture a few of them.

When you think of it it seems strange that any store in Janesville should be without the sign of life and progress.

When you note the prices we make it will seem stranger still.

But, why don't YOU put up a sign?
